Server request: Can you please take an order of chicken wings from the card? Copeland’s young son ordered them and didn’t like them. They had sent back an almost completely undeaten order, picked up a new batch from the kitchen with sauce on the side, tried a dish, and left the dish again. Everything else on their account, which was about $60, was fine. As expected, the server asked the manager and, since the owner was on site, the manager asked the owner. As Copeland didn’t expect, the answer wasn’t to give a discount or offer a free dessert or one of the many answers usually given in circumstances like this. The response was that Oak & Embers was calling the Orange Police Department. Copeland, who is black, recorded the incident once the police officer arrived and streamed it via Facebook live. The scene the video captures is awkward and bizarre. who admits he answered the call because no one else in the department wanted to, looks at a dish of chicken wings with a single meal and confirms the Copeland family simply Like them. The owner, Marc Garofoli, withdraws the item from the account. Outside, the officer tells Copeland that the cops are not a “collection agency” for restaurants. Days later, Garofoli remained true to his decision. Although, he told Scene, he understands that he could come out of a story about the incident with the appearance of a villain, there were real financial reasons in his mind to bring the police to his restaurant for a law dispute. “We’ve had a lot of problems in the past at the restaurant with customers eating three-quarters of their meal or a percentage of their meals à we give large portions, typically à and that particular place, we had a lot of comped food”, said Scene. “From $1,500 to $2,000 a week. We tried to fight the problem, and it was only during Covid, and it’s only there, so we tried to find a way to stop it”.As for the difference between someone trying to avoid paying for a meal they ate mostly and someone who just didn’t love their food and didn’t eat it, Garofoli said that in him there was a problem. That’s not much. “We are struggling to make ends meet”, he said. “It’s not a question of costs. It’s labor. It’s the rent. I’m just trying to prove that a ranch dressing helps pay the rent, especially now. We’re a broken restaurant. It doesn’t matter if it’s a fillet or a ranch condiment, everything counts. We never took a salary from Pinecrest. We are trying to provide the best food possible and pay 200 employees”.The restaurant shared a similar message on its Facebook page last week, although it did not mention the incident with the police. For Garofoli, calling the police was an effort to solve the situation. “We didn’t want a fight”, he said. Asked if someone black would consider the call of the police, in front of their children, about the dinner bill, to be the exact opposite of détente, Garofoli replied that he didn’t even know who was at the table that night and in general: “We don’t consider the police a threat. We consider the police as a help”. It was the Orange police department, he said, who suggested calling them if he needed “help with customers”, which he said Scene did a half dozen times since March of last year as the food losses comped spiral. Orange police confirmed they were called fewer than 10 times to the restaurant, and not always for a controversial account, but said Oak & Embers misunderstood the limits of their offer of help. “We told everyone if they are having a dispute and we can be helpful to call us”, Lt. Mike Roberts said scenes. This, he said, would include customers who are undisciplined in some way. But, “This one in particular was civil, with a client who was ready, willing and able to pay for her meal less. that they haven’t eaten. It’s a civil matter, and we don’t have the authority to help, except to guide management to make the right decision. If someone had done a scam to intentionally scam a food vendor and and three quarters of a meal, I’d say you have to pay, and theft is less than a gray area if you have a party come in, eat some appetizers and then they all disappear. They’ll be arrested, and we’ll be happy to do that. But this was not a question for the police.” Tags: Food, Police, Image We welcome readers to submit letters regarding articles and content in Cleveland Scene. Oak & Embers owners, Marc and Gretchen Garofoli, have spent years researching Southern cuisine to offer you this experience. Their many trips to Carolinas, Georgia and Kentucky brought to life an idea born of their love for a big barbecue. The Oak & Embers menu offers homemade selections prepared from scratch. Great care goes in the preparation of each entree. Brisket, pork, ribs and chicken are smoked into wood for hours to enhance flavor and texture à pink, tender meat is proof of this process. The lighter fare options include salads and flatbreads prepared with unique flavour combinations to offer an escape from the mundane. Each appetizer and side dish is cooked to order from recipes created by years of tasty research. Our unique sauces, rubies and seasonings are original and carefully combined to complete every entree. Enjoy our full bar stocked with craft beers and handmade bourbons, as well as some local favorites or exchange it with one of our specialty drinks which are nothing short of exceptional. Whatever your desire, we invite you to slow down, and enjoy the Southern Oak & Embers culinary experience that we are so proud to share with you.
