What are the three branches of philosophy

An important theme in human evolution is philosophy. This wise so it critically examines the concept of philosophy and defines the main branches of philosophy. Ideally, philosophy is derived from the Greek word which means Philosophia a love of Wisdom. It was thought of as a general study of a fundamental questions especially those relating to existence, knowledge, values, reason, mind and Language. (Sober 86). It is worth noting that philosophy can be differentiated from other disciplines from the fact that it critically evaluates the existing and emerging problems completely guided by supporting more rational. It is worth recognizing that the concept of philosophy has evolved over time. The ancient work Philosophers has thrown a solid land for the development of what we currently have. Furthermore, it was documented that one of the main virtues of philosophy is his ability to teach, not what to think rather how to think. Acquired skills in order to ensure that humans are capable of a critical analysis issues, orthodoxy question as well as issues expressed in the most clear manner (Warburton 64). The main branches of philosophy was difficult to come up with the various branches of philosophy; However, the efforts of ancient philosophers have caused five main branches. These include metaphysics, ethics, politics, aesthetics, and epistemology. There is no doubt that all these branches are associated in one way or another. According to Sober, 35 the metaphysics deal exclusively with human beings by saying all the issues related to the existence forms so the baseline line of our way to see the world. In the strict sense, metaphysics is the study of the nature of reality, addressing issues like the link between the human body and the mind. We try to reveal if the world is truth or just a fantasy. Among the key elements of metaphysics considered rational are that reality is absolute and the world is real, but it is not a false impression. The existence of the physical world makes every one every entity to have a particular nature. Entities interact with each other based on their nature. Furthermore, every action has a cause and effect. This branch is very important as it gives us the basis of philosophy, which made the human race able to deal with the reality (Warburton 86). Politics as a branch of philosophy applies to a group of individuals in a society. The great importance of this branch is that it allows humanity to know how to choose to set up society, as well as the best way to act within it. It is believed that in every political system individuals choose to be authorized to function in a way based on their nature. In the situation this is not the case, then there are possibilities that the rebellion will be exposed or the political setting collater (sober 94). Furthermore, policy should allow faculty to reason to preserve and coercion should not be practiced. Finally, it is rational for the system to ensure that an individual is prevented from committing crimes as the killing or robbery against another kind, ensuring that the government can use the strength of retaliation, as objectivating the existing laws of the Land (sober 73). Another important branch of philosophy is ethical; He strictly tries to answer the question, which is the correct way humanity must present, while living with others. Usually it is considered the study of good against evil. This branch has three other secondary branches that are; Meta-ethics concerning the question of good and evil, as well as if there is no absolute ethical truth and the degree of such truths (Warburton 96). Ethics regulatory centers mainly on how you should act as well as the best line of action to be undertaken. The last secondary branch is applied ethical, which tries to enter Reality of ethics application, for example, trying to understand if abortion is right. The great importance of this branch is with regard to humanity giving the possibility of deciding the line of conduct from here here The odds that his actions are random and destroyed. In this way it is possible to pursue a common goal. As suggested by Warburton 124 epistemology offers with the various methods that are used by human beings to acquire knowledge. Problems solved include challenges carried out by non-believers as well as the link between what must be considered true, right and to be believed. Ideally, it is with the way our minds are related to reality and if these links are valid or not. The great importance of epistemology is explained as human thinking, thus making it be able to distinguish between truth and false. The key elements are that human sense is valid and important in ensuring that we get information about the world. Likewise, reasoning is what makes us acquire knowledge and understanding. Finally, aesthetics mainly deals with studying art: questions that embraces and the purpose. Questions revolt here offers with art constituents, as art is evaluated and judged, among others. Art is considered to bring meaning to man as it is in force since the origin of mankind. Furthermore, art concretize abstractions, thus bringing base ideas or emotions to what the observer has grasped (sober 20). Conclusion The essay has succinctly covered five branches of philosophy by defining them, giving them importance and rational elements of each. These branches include; Metaphysics, ethics, aesthetics, epistemology and politics. Works cited Sober, Elliott.
